True to their Gypsy traditions, the women of the Marks family have offered their mystical services to the people of San Diego for generations.

From darkened parlors in small homes dotted throughout the county, Marks women have offered to help the love-struck to find happiness and the misbegotten to get free of the curses and negative energy of modern life.

A chain of Marks family establishments, offering fortunetelling, Tarot card readings and other psychic assistance, has stretched from the blue-collar, commercial strips of National City to the affluent, beach clime of Encinitas.

But now, in an unusually hard-nosed legal tactic, the district attorney's office has filed criminal charges against six members of the Marks family, charging them with bilking customers of hundreds of thousands of dollars with phony promises about curing headaches and mending broken love lives.

It is not uncommon for fortunetellers and other soothsayers to be charged with theft, for making money mysteriously disappear during ritual cleansing ceremonies. In fact, a recent episode of the television show "NYPD Blue" had such an incident as a subplot.

The heart of the San Diego case, however, involves harder-to-prove allegations of "theft by false pretense." Prosecutors have alleged that the Marks women illegally took money from their customers with promises they knew they could not fulfill.

As a condition of bail, four Marks women—Elaine Marks, 37, Laura Gordon Marks, 50 (also known as Madam Ruth), Sonia Marks, 52 (also known as Mrs. Renee), and Dorothy Marks, 41 (also known as Sister Sofie)—are prohibited from engaging in psychic activity or being in a place where such activity is under way. The other two defendants are juveniles.

One elderly gentleman allegedly gave the Marks family $675,000 over 11 years to rekindle his romantic spirit through prayer and other spiritual means. Finally, convinced he was being duped, he went to police.

The Marks family have fought back by hiring three of the city's top criminal defense attorneys to protect their livelihood and, as they see it, their religion of probing the supernatural for relief from life's vexations.

The attorneys plan a vigorous defense based on concerns about freedom of religion, the 1st Amendment and the need for society to respect cultural diversity.

"If what the Marks family does is criminal, how about those astrologers who were advising Nancy Reagan when she was in the White House?" said Robert Grimes, attorney for one of the Marks women. "Is astrology somehow more scientific than what the Gypsies do? And how about those psychic lines that advertise on TV for $6 a minute, $240 an hour? Is the D.A. going to bust them too?"

The Marks family saga in San Diego dates, like so many other San Diego families, to the 1940s when the city was experiencing rapid expansion and business opportunities were plentiful.

The family patriarch, Dewey, and his wife, Rose, moved to San Diego from Kansas City. Other large American cities already had established Gypsy communities but San Diego did not. Soon the family was dominant in the region's psychic industry, which proved to be a lucrative one.

"It's something our women are gifted with," one Marks family member told a television reporter recently. "They're consultants.

<http://pqasb.pqarchiver.com/latimes/access/22701566.html?dids=22701566:22701566&F...> 2/10/2007

Historically, Gypsies have been among the world's most persecuted people.

Starting in 1933, the Nazis methodically killed between 1 million and 1.5 million of them in an attempt to destroy the Gypsy population. A front-page story in the San Diego Union in 1881 warned that Gypsies from Bulgaria had been spotted in San Diego, but reassured readers that the police would run them out of town if they began begging.

Although only a small percentage of the estimated 1 million people of Gypsy descent in America engages in fortunetelling and psychic readings, Gypsy influence in the industry is strong.

"Fortunetelling has been part of the Romani (Gypsy) culture for 14 centuries, dating to our ancestors in India where it is a revered skill," said Ian Hancock, a British citizen of Gypsy descent who is a Gypsy scholar, a leader in the International Romani Union, and a professor of English at the University of Texas at Austin.

"The Romani word for fortune-teller means, literally, healer," Hancock said. "Although the Romani people's beliefs have changed over the centuries, there has been a continuum of belief in fortune-telling and spiritualism. In America, fortunetelling has not been as respected, and there have been culture clashes with the authorities."

The belief that Gypsies can inflict and remove curses, Hancock said, may have begun as a self-protective device as Gypsies suffered hostility and threats when moving from country to country. In San Diego, one selling point the Marks family allegedly use with prospective customers is that only Gypsies can remove curses and locate the source of negative energy.

Marks family members have always been elusive quarry for the press. Except for a brief interview with a consumer reporter for KFMB-TV, the CBS affiliate, no member of the family has spoken about the current charges.

A woman at the National City home of "Big Mike" Marks, son of the late Dewey Marks and now considered "king of the Gypsies" in San Diego County, shouted at a Times reporter and photographer to go away and not take any pictures of the huge PSYCHIC sign visible from Interstate 5 in the National City area. Similar reactions were received at other Marks-owned establishments.

Gene Bardot, the San Diego detective who headed the eight-month investigation, said additional victims are coming forth since news of the psychic bust has been splashed on television.

One problem is that many of the newly discovered victims are embarrassed and do not want their names made public, Bardot said, which could hinder the prosecution. In fact, even the three victims mentioned in the current indictment are identified only by first names.

The Marks family "come across people when they are at a crisis time in their lives and need desperately to hear something good," Bardot said. He does not buy the argument that the cures and services were religious in nature.

"Our experience is that when the money runs out so does the conversation between the Marks family and the customer," he said.
